News articles: an essential aid to English teaching

The study of vocabulary, grammar and syntax is key to learning English, but finding new, interesting and motivating classroom material can be a problem for teachers all over the world. So from our extensive newsgathering resources we have created a language-learning package, the Newsweek English Program, to help you, the teacher overcome this difficulty.

Each lesson includes several creative exercises covering grammar, vocabulary, punctuation, spelling, comprehension and style.

The author of the monthly NEWSWEEK ENGLISH PROGRAM Julie WEISS holds a Ph.D. in American Studies

Journalistic excellence every week: in English

Read history in the making. Explore what's really happening behind the headlines with incisive reporting and in-depth analysis from the journalists, politicians and celebrities who write for Newsweek. This international magazine is full of photos and illustrations, making it easier to understand, whatever your level of English.

Newsweek covers it all: politics, economics, technology, science, the arts and culture

Let Newsweek's editors and writers guide you through significant world events

Newsweek is published weekly except occasionally two issues are combined into one expanded issue which counts as two subscription copies.

Every month via e-mail
A complete, ready-to-use English lesson based on world events

The example above is a Newsweek English Program developed around the article entitled "Growing Green Jobs".

The English Program offers eight comprehensive lessons

From October 2010 through to May 2011 each lesson focuses on an article from one of Newsweek's regular sections. The lively content provides an ideal foundation for interesting and entertaining lessons on current English usage.
